

ROUTE WON'T GO OVER BIG HILL

If Preliminary Estimate of Cost At $60,000 Proves Accurate, Says State Man

Unless a thorough survey of the proposed highway from Madison county to McKee, Jackson county, proves first impressions erroneous, it is very probable that the route will not go over the Big Hill, at the top of which is the border line between the two counties of Madison and Jackson.

State Highway Engineer L. L. Fitch, who came here early in the week to make a preliminary survey of the route, expressed the opinion that it would cost something like $60,000 to build a road up the Big Hill that would satisfy conditions.

Madison county has appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of building the road in that section. It is expected that some $40,000 will be obtained by private subscription and this augmented by state and federal aid funds, was expected to be sufficient to care for the short Madison county end of the much-needed new highway.

However, it is stated by officials that the suggestion of spending $60,000 to build a road up Big Hill is one of the questions and wholly unrealistic.

But, says not mean, however, that the highway from Madison county to McKee is regarded in the hands. It was proposed to go through Owsley's Rock and then striking the McKee road to the left of Big Hill some distance. Those who have not yet given this route their approval are not likely to be convinced by a small portion of the road up the Big Hill road.

HEAVY RISE IN KENTUCKY RIVER

With a rise of about four-tenths of a foot during the morning Thursday in the Kentucky river at Lock No. 10, water was about one foot over the miter gate at the lock, Keeper John Walters reported Thursday.

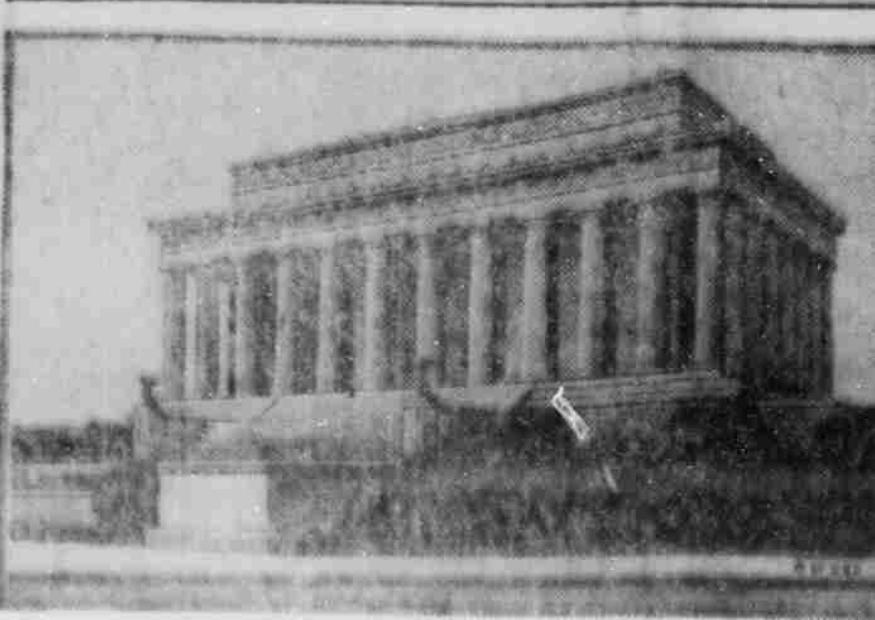

The river was rising slowly all day Thursday and a total rise of about twelve feet had been registered, bringing a good tide but very little drift was running, Mr. Walters reported, as the heavy tides earlier in the winter had about cleared away the drift.

The water raised sufficiently to flood the road between Ford and Boonesboro, practically cutting off traffic during the night, he reported.

The Boonesboro ferry, which is splendidly equipped with gasoline engine, was kept running all day by Ferryman Wm. Asher and his capable assistant Hardie Smith. No attempt was made to operate at night, however, owing to the heavy current and danger from drift logs.

The ferry is equipped with a powerful electric headlight, but two men are required to fend off drift during the day and it was feared that it might prove disastrous to attempt the passage during the darkness. Not much damage has been reported as yet from the heavy rise in the river.

Harding Will Accept Lincoln Memorial on Behalf of Nation

Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D. C.

TEN years of the combined effort of architect, sculptor, artist, and the Lincoln Memorial Commission, with the expenditure of more than $2,000,000, has brought to completion the splendid Lincoln Memorial at Washington, which will be dedicated soon. The present plan is to have the statue of Lincoln seated in the center of the memorial, facing the Lincoln Memorial Commission. President Harding will accept it on behalf of the nation and former President Wilson will make a brief address on Lincoln.

This Memorial, a truly splendid achievement of modern art, stands at the head of a wide approach. Within the portico the great statue of Lincoln, by Daniel Chester French, is visible from a distance. From base to top the statue is over thirty feet high, the seated figure of Lincoln alone being twenty-two feet in height.

As the structure is open to the action of the elements and subjected to seasonal variations of temperature, the greatest care has been taken to construct the Memorial of materials which will provide resistance to the weather and at the same time lend beauty to the edifice.

Eight massive doors of bronze provide entrance to the Memorial, and the main entrance is reached by a flight of stairs. The interior of the Memorial is a vast hall, the ceiling of which is a masterpiece of modern architecture. The floor is of polished granite, and the walls are of white marble.

Earl Combs, of Richmond, gave the boys on the Louisville baseball team a sample of his fine fielding in the workout at Pensacola Wednesday. He and a youngster from Louisville called "Piggy" Stanley seem to be the stars of the rookies. The Courier-Journal's correspondent said of the practice game:

The three inning workout was a terrific drive by "Piggy" Stanley over the left center field fence, scoring a runner ahead of him in the opening for the Yankees. Earl Combs, who cavorted in right field for the Regulars, fielded in a brilliant manner. He demonstrated that he has a wonderful arm by throwing out a runner at the home plate on a long drive to his territory and tossing out another runner at first base on a hit. At bat he did not look so good. Against waist balls. As soon as he learns to hit them around his belt he is sure to improve his batting. He is one of the hardest workers in camp and is making every effort to make good.

CONVICTS IN DEADLY DUEL AT EDDYVILLE

Young Louisville Bandit Stabs Another To Death With Knife Within Prison Walls

(By Associated Press)
Eddyville, Ky., Mar. 17—A duel to death was fought today in the penitentiary here between Clifford Quinlan and Monte Guess, young bandits from Louisville. Quinlan was stabbed in the throat and died in a few minutes. Quinlan was serving 10 years for a restaurant holdup in Louisville in 1920. Guess is serving a life term for killing a guard at the Louisville reform school in 1916. He was then 17 years old and at 23 has slain two men.

The death battle between Guess and Quinlan seems to have been staged deliberately. They quarreled a week ago. Both secretly secured knives and this morning while on their way to the prison machine shop, Guess, knife in hand, sprang at Quinlan. Quinlan was ready for him, but Guess was too quick, and Quinlan sank to the floor with Guess' knife in his throat.

Guess' first crime was most brutal. While an inmate of the reform school, he procured a fall from a water closet, slipped on a sleeping guard and battered his head. The latter died within a few hours, without regaining consciousness. Quinlan's mother lives in Louisville. Guess came from Breckinridge county, his home being near Fordsville in Ohio county.

POOL SELLING GOES BIG IN KENTUCKY

Louisville, Mar. 17—Kentucky probably will lead all other states east of the Mississippi river in organizing co-operative marketing associations for the sale of the farm products by the end of the year, in the opinion of the leaders of the farmers unions in the state. One organization, the Bluegrass Growers' Co-operative Marketing Association, with 55,000 members and controlling the sale of several hundred million pounds of turkey tobacco, already is in operation. A strong movement, led by the forces that organized the turkey growers, is at work in western Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana organizing the growers of dark tobacco.

At least four others, and probably one or two more, co-operative marketing associations are expected to be organized by the spring of 1923. These include the bluegrass seed growers, orchard grass seed growers, the grain growers in certain western Kentucky counties and the sweet potato growers.

The berry growers of western Kentucky already have an organization of their own, but it is said they are considering reorganization of their sales plan to conform more nearly with the approved method.

Dairymen and poultry producers are also to be organized. An Association of the former now is being organized in northern Kentucky in the territory closest to Cincinnati, while L. C. Pierce, poultry expert for the Farmers' Union in Kentucky, reports the sale of several carloads of poultry from western Kentucky. It is the plan of the union to organize dairymen and poultrymen throughout the state within the near future.

Leaders could not estimate the value of the several crops that it is the purpose to organize, although each is said to run far into the millions of dollars, with tobacco leading.

FASHION SHOW MAKES REAL HIT

The Fashion Show under the personal direction of Mr. Jack Pashin, went over big at the opera house Thursday night. The theatre was packed to its capacity and many were turned away. It was the first fashion revue ever attempted in Richmond and the models, all of whom were local girls, gave in for their crowd of applause.

A number of the models assisted in the style show, including Messrs. J. S. Stantler, H. M. Whittington, Rice & Arnold, L. E. Lane, Muncy Bros. and Mr. Pashin of the Richmond Green Houses. These models are to be complimented for their efforts in giving to the people of this city an up-to-date style show equal to those put on in the larger cities.

The young ladies who took part in the style show were Miss Margaret McBride, Miss Margaret Winburn, Miss Elizabeth Harris, Miss Allen Law, Miss Grace Law, Miss Elizabeth Whitlock, and Miss Gladys Park. Each of the models performed in a manner far above the amateurish and the spring garments were wonderfully displayed by these young ladies.

Mr. Pashin, as well as the other merchants, were highly commended for the effort and it is planned to give even larger displays in the future.

The soft strains of music during the style show by the Elder orchestra added much in making the show a decided hit.

The style show will be repeated at the opera house tonight with an entire change of costumes, footwear jewelry, etc., in connection with the picture program, featuring Elsie Ferguson in "Footlights," a splendid Paramount production.

YOUNG GIRL FACES A SERIOUS CHARGE

That She Ordered Merchandise Under False Names and Gave "Cold Checks" Therefor

A brown pony owned by Lucy Hensley, 18 years old, living about 18 miles from this city near Doyleville, gave postal authorities a clue which resulted in the arrest of the young woman on a charge of using the mails to defraud. She was brought to Richmond late yesterday afternoon and arraigned before U. S. Commissioner W. C. Bennett, and held to the federal grand jury under $500 bond, which she gave. She entered a plea of guilty to the charges.

The warrant for the arrest of the young woman was sworn out by Postoffice Inspector V. H. Beck, of Lexington, who investigated the case. Through the use of fictitious names and checks drawn on these names, the young woman, according to postal men, has been defrauding merchants and other honest people throughout the country. Her operations have been under way for some time, they declare, and the ownership of the brown pony resulted in her arrest.

The girl drove the pony to Richmond every time she claimed a package mailed to her under an assumed name, and local authorities were made to give government officials her correct name. However, they gave a good description of the pony, and by tracing the animal, Inspector Beck was enabled to make the arrest.

Local postoffice officials say that the girl had obtained dresses, riding skirts, and other wearing apparel from Chicago homes. She never gave the same name twice, they said. Her checks came back "cold" and the mail order houses began to complain to the postal authorities. She went to the postoffice to get two bundles which had been received here addressed to different names, but the postoffice boys were on the lookout and did not give them to her after they had learned the game was being played.

Kisses, some of them, "kick" up your blood pressure says Prof. J. V. Breitweiser, of the University of California, who claims that he has an instrument called the Kissograph which will register the linear extent and millimeters of blood pressure resulting from the different kinds of kisses, and that it is so sensitive that it will register the degree of frigidity in kisses that one woman gives another whom she does not like to the intense warmth of the rare soul kiss.
